CHINA, MEXICO AND CANADA REMAIN Top Export Destinations in 2024

U.S. agricultural exports were expected to hit $169.5 billion in fiscal year 2024, according to data from the USDA Economic Research Service in November 2023. This is down from $178.7 billion in exports for 2023, largely due to a combination of lower unit values on products like wheat and corn and reduced supply for products like beef.

The estimate was also down $2.5 billion from August 2023's predictions due to reductions in demand for grain and feed, as well as livestock, poultry and dairy exports.

China will remain the top market for agricultural exports. An estimated $29.5 billion in agricultural products will be exported to China in 2024. Top exports in the past have included soybeans, corn, cotton, beef and coarse grains.

One area to keep an eye on is China's pork market. African swine fever spread throughout the country in 2019 and 2020, causing a significant drop in pork output that created new opportunities for exporters from the U.S., Canada, Brazil and other countries.

Pork production has since rebounded, but the market remains volatile, according to USDA ERS. The U.S. was the second-largest exporter to China during the incident, despite trade tensions at the time, and any disruptions to China's production could create opportunities for companies in the U.S.

Top Export Destinations Continued

That said, USDA expects overall reduced demand from Asian markets. Japan is still expected to import $11.4 billion worth of goods, though demand for wheat, beef and pork are down. Exports to South Korea are expected to fall to $7.2 billion for similar reasons.

Mexico isn't far behind as an export partner for the U.S., with 2024 exports projected at $27.9 billion, down $300 million from earlier forecasts due to reduced wheat, beef and pork prospects. However, corn could be a winner for the coming year.

Brazil dethroned the U.S. as the largest corn exporter in 2022, but the Brazilian corn harvest is expected to be 129 million metric tons for the 2023-24 season, down from 137 million metric tons in 2022-23, according to Reuters.

Mexico, Central and South America are all expected to help improve export prospects for the recent large rice crop. Exports for the coming year are forecast at $2 billion, up from $200 million projected in August, due to larger volumes partially offset by lower unit values.

USDA increased the export forecast for Canada by $200 million, to $27.7 billion, due to rising demand for ethanol. Usage is being supported by provincial policies in Quebec and Ontario, leading to more interest in the fuel.

Canada is also expected to remain the largest destination for exports of high-value agricultural products, which totaled $19.7 billion in 2022. These include items that will be directly sold in supermarkets, such as fresh vegetables ($2.1 billion exported in 2022) and fruits ($1.7 exported in 2022) rather than further processed into other goods.

Exports to the EU are expected to be at $11.8 billion, down $200 million from August's projection. The EU has been importing more oilseed products from Ukraine, which is expected to reduce prospects for U.S. soybeans.

Additionally, Brazil is expecting a particularly large soybean harvest in early 2024, which could put further pressure on U.S. exports. This is on top of record harvests in August and September 2023, which were nearly 50% larger than in 2022, according to Reuters.

Even though existing markets will take the lion's share of exports in 2024, the USDA is on the lookout for new markets for future years. The agency will use $1.3 billion from the Commodity Credit Corporation funds to establish the Regional Agricultural Promotion Program, which seeks to introduce U.S. agricultural products to new markets.

"Market diversification is an important tool for maximizing growth opportunities for U.S. agriculture, as well as hedging the risk of market contraction and general volatility in the global marketplace," said Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack.

Estimated U.S. Agricultural Product Exports in 2024

At the same time, U.S. corn production rose 10% this year, approaching all-time highs, despite dry weather. Mexico was expected to import 7.5 million tons of 2023-24 corn from the U.S. as of Sept. 28, which was more than 20% above the previous high.

Central America is expected to take in $6.1 billion in U.S. exports, about on par with 2023 levels. Reduced commodity prices, particularly for wheat and corn, mean that export values aren't likely to grow year-over-year.

African Cuisine is on the Rise, With Unique Flavors Leading the Way

Interest in African cuisine is on the rise, with 47% of Gen Z and 46% of millennials interested in seeing more Middle Eastern and North African influences on menus, according to data from Technomic. The Specialty Food Association expects African flavors to be among the top international foods to spark interest in 2024.

"Exploring African pantry items will also continue as brands educate the Western palate to African flavors and ingredients," said food writer Chala June.

There's still plenty of education to be done. Only 19% of consumers, rising to 30% among Gen Z and 29% among millennials, know the culinary differences between different countries in the Middle East and North Africa, according to Technomic.

This means many people are looking for flavors associated with Africa, rather than complete dishes. Consumers are interested in exploring new flavors, spices and ingredients as they become more familiar with food from countries such as Morocco, Egypt, and Ethiopia, but regional specialties are being paired with more familiar ingredients.

One opportunity is taking a simple dish, like a hamburger, and adding flavors like garlic, mint, basil, parsley, and za'atar, according to Lentils.org. Heartier additions, like falafel, can also be added to other dishes to add some regional flavor. Flavor-forward African cuisine lends itself well to dishes such as soups, stews, breads and grilled meats.

One ingredient of note is breadfruit, which grows in Africa but is also being raised in other tropical areas, including Florida and Hawaii. While it doesn't originate in Africa, it is gaining popularity on the continent as well as worldwide.

The fruit can be prepared in a number of ways, ranging from pancakes to bowls, and it is gaining popularity for its sustainable bona fides due to being a low-maintenance, high-yielding crop.

Demand for Convenience Creates Opportunity for Processed Vegetables

Processed fruits and vegetable exports in 2024 are expected to remain unchanged from 2023 at $7.7 billion, according to data from USDA ERS. However, while volumes will remain steady, new trends will affect what consumers look for.

A growing opportunity lies in the fact that consumers are becoming less wary of processed foods, provided that they're healthy, according to Mintel. This opens an opportunity for processed vegetables, which can lean on the health halo of their ingredients and cause consumers to focus on their positives.

A trend that could carry over from 2023 and build on health demand is the need for easily prepared options. A study by FMI found that more than two-thirds of shoppers want more healthful prepared options. Heat-and-eat vegetables will be an important component for meeting that demand.

Manufacturers will also need to provide where their produce comes from and how it is processed. Nearly three-quarters (72%) of consumers said that transparency is extremely important in deciding which brands and retailers they will support, according to data from Maersk.

The most important information was where a product was harvested, processed and packaged, according to the study. Growing traceability regulations are expected to make transparency even more important.

This also provides an opportunity for manufacturers to be transparent about the benefits processed vegetables provide. Offering detailed information about the amount of vitamins, minerals and proteins on the packaging could make products more appealing to consumers.

news briefs

What do food companies need to do to ensure growth in 2024? While there's no clear-cut answer, many appear focused on deploying artificial intelligence (AI) solutions, automating processes where possible, and maintaining an agile growth mindset.

Beef prices are at record highs. Beef-based products from burgers to steaks are expensive due to a shrinking cattle supply and higher input costs. Cattle herds are at their smallest numbers in decades due to prolonged drought and analysts don't expect the pressure to ease anytime soon, reported CNBC.

Labor shortages in global manufacturing are threatening to jeopardize growth within the industry. An aging workforce and the changing expectations of the next generations of workers are leaving jobs unfilled. Recruitment challenges and an ever-widening skills gap need to be rapidly addressed, and automation could provide an effective solution.

Packaged salads and greens continue to do well despite inflation. Circana Integrated Fresh data reflected a 2% dollar sales increase for packaged greens year-over-year, despite unit sales down 4%, while dollar sales for fresh salad kits declined 2% while unit sales increased 7%, reported The Packer.

Breadfruit has all the makings of a future food trend. With its potential for food resilience, breadfruit could support climate smart, sustainable development globally in the near future, reported Forbes.

Packaged fruit is becoming more popular. Packaged-fruit sales are rising, with almost 80% of category incremental dollar sales growth, according to a survey from Fusion. This is adding more than $850.6 million to the category, reported The Packer.

The seafood category is in a good position for the future. Despite inflation and a slight global decrease in seafood sales in 2022, seafood sales this year were higher than in 2019, indicating widespread seafood consumption that began in 2020 is "here to stay," per a report from the Alaska Seafood Marketing Institute, reported Progressive Grocer.

Ethically sourced produce is thriving in an age of transparency and more discerning shoppers. Sustainability and ESG are part of many sourcing conversations for growers and buyers, while 65% of consumers recognize the Fair Trade Certified label and 78% of them trust it, happy to pay a 5.1% premium to support such products, reported The Packer.

Demand for instant noodles jumped 2.6% globally to a record high of 121.2 billion servings last year. Paired with protein or enjoyed as a midday snack or late-night craving, 2023 marked the seventh straight year of growth for the collegiate staple and increasingly nutritious instant option.

Herbal Lodge - Authentic Native American Natural Remedies

Petoskey, Michigan

Herbal Lodge is based in beautiful Petoskey, Mich. in the homelands of the Anishinabek. They have been producing time-tested natural remedies since 2009. Native American Bark Teas are not just delicious and unique, but they also have a rich history and cultural significance. The use of herbal remedies has been an important part of Native American traditional medicine for centuries, passed down from generation to generation. Our favorite is Nerve Tea, packaged in compostable packaging. Not only does this tea taste great, but it also helps people with anxiety and supports nerve issues. Made with organic and/or wild-harvested ingredients from the Great Lakes Region. Check the line of Minagin pain ointments as well!
